December Tech Tip:

LAB ROOM TEMPS ~ KEEP EQUIPMENT OUT OF COLD WEATHER

Brrr...the cold weather is upon us for many labs across the country. Our technician Robert says to make sure your labs are no cooler than room temperature, somewhere between 68 and 74 degrees Fahrenheit to prevent condensation and rust on your equipment.

It's the end of busy testing season. What to do next?

When was the last time you changed the hydraulic oil in your compression machine?

Have you taken apart your spherical head to clean and lubricate it lately?

When I ask all our senior technicians what are some of the dirtiest pieces of equipment when they arrive to the labs or mobile trailers for annual calibrations, the popular responses are;

NCATS, GYRATORY MOLDS, SCALES, AND SIEVES.

Cleaning and preventative maintenance of your equipment are key to accurate testing results, longevity, and reducing costly repairs or added labor costs to your calibrations.
